In these papers the revelation is made that 'on or about the 18th day of July, 1830, at the city of New York, this plaintiff and the defendant were duly married." It had been previously understood that the couple was married at Newport, but no details of the New York ceremony will be given.

The papers stated that the plaintiff was abandoned Aug. 20. It is added that in the opinion of the plaintiff the defendant owns real and personal estate to the amount of large value. The papers state that a separation provision for the support of the plaintiff and counsel fees are asked for.

The attorneys for the plaintiff said the papers would be served on young McGrath as soon as he can be found, or in case he cannot be found they willin be served by publication. A motion for counsel fees will also be made.

Grimsby is a seaport town of England, in the County of Lincoln, on the south side of the estuary of the Humber, fifteen miles southeast of Hull. It has a harbor with extensive docks.

There has been cholera there recently, and it is considered an infected port by the quarantine authorities.

When asked this morning what he would do when the emigrants reach this port Dr. Jenkins said he considered it very improbable that the emigrants had sailed from Grimsby for America.

"I know of no line of steamers leaving that port," he said, "and even if there was such a line, it is probable emigrants from the Continent would go to Hull or Liverpool.

"I believe the steamship companies are enforcing the rule requiring a period of detention on the other side, and lift the emigrants mentioned were detained on the other side, and there is no sickness among them when they reach this country, if they are really coming here, they will, of course, be allowed to land.

Although the theft took place several weeks ago, few knew about it until usiness for years, and in the Home institution no one was more highly re-garded. He lived a quiet life, spent garded. He lived a quiet life, spent most of his time with his wife and two children, looked after his aged parents and also educated his sisters.

Now it is known that he dabbled in Wall street. With what money he had saved he gambled in stocks. Finding himself losing everything by a drop in the market, he hypothecated the bank's securities in order to recover his losses. Fresident Stephenson first discovered the theft. When questioned about the missing bonds Cashier Bain made a full confession. Is nowing, as he did, that discovery was certain, he preferred to remain and take the chances of going to jail. He seemed utterly heartbroken. He could have easily made away with $150,000 or more, but he was content with the amount stolen.

President Stephenson called in several of the directors to consult as to what should be done. As a result Bain was discharged for "dishonesty." The bank did not think it necessary to begin criminal proceedings, as Bain's surely, the Fidelity and Casually Company, was good for $15,000. The bank itself was only out something like $1,600.

When the Fidelity Company was notified of the stealing its President, Mr. Seward, promptly said the full amount of $15,000 would be paid. The intention was to arrest Bain at once, but the fact that he remained in the city, making no attempt to run away, and that he "really was not a thief at heart," caused the Fidelity officials to reconsider the decision.

"It is not for us to prosecute Bain," said President Seward to an "Evening World" reporter this morning, "but, so far as we are concerned, we propose to do our duty.
